Q: How to use TIdSocketServerReadTimeout in Delphi 2007 I'm trying to set a TIdSocketServerReadTimeout of 500 Milliseconds. My understanding is the TIdSocketServerReadTimeout sets a limit on the number of milliseconds a TIdTCPClient can wait to complete a read operation. In TIdTCPClient.Timeout I'm currently setting this to 20 Milliseconds. I am guessing that when I set the TIdSocketServerReadTimeout to 500 Milliseconds, the TIdTCPClient.ReadTimeout property no longer takes effect. What is the correct way to set the TIdSocketServerReadTimeout? A: Are you aware that with the RTL from Delphi 2007, TIdTCPClient.ReadTimeout is now read-only? You can not set ReadTimeout for that component. I don't think it is possible, since the component has always reported the same value for it's own ReadTimeout property. But you can set the ReadTimeout property on the actual TIdSocketServer object that owns that component. Here is an example of that. procedure TForm1.FormCreate(Sender: TObject); begin AssignSocket(TIdServer.Create(nil), IndyApp); TIdSocketServer(AssignedSocket).ReadTimeout := 500; end; Note that ReadTimeout and ReadTotalTimeoutMultiplier have been deprecated. A: For Delphi XE and later, you can set the ReadTimeout property of the TIdTCPClient directly via the TIdSocketServer.ReadTimeout property. If you're not using TIdTCPClient, but perhaps TIdHTTP, you can configure that component's ReadTimeout property directly. If you're looking for something for less than $100 that will seriously improve your experience with your iPhone, then I think you'll really like this product. The best way to hide the search page's visit list is to block the common phrases such as "Search" and "About." The installation of the Search Blocker allows you to block the search page. The Search Blocker has been around for decades but has been making a comeback recently in light of the growing number of spam using keyword search engine methods. In addition to the increase in web spam, the removal of web content has become easier than ever. The main point of the Search Blocker is to block the search query and link structure inside of the page as well as the keywords. Every time you visit a search engine result page such as Google.com, and you click on a link that results in search, the search engine will issue a request to your browser for an URL. The URL is what is known as a search query. The browser reads the URL and generates the requested search results page. The browser then returns the search results page to you. If you find a keyword in your search results page, it means that the keyword has been indexed. Even if you are not logged into a web search engine, you will still end up on the page after you enter your desired keywords. The Search Blocker will hide the keywords and other links that you cannot read. Contain++ is the most reliable and stable Word Count, Quota, Directory Size, and File Size. It allows you to specify the number of words or characters before and after the search, how to count the words or characters within the search result, how to ignore some special characters, and how to count in the specified file. With Contain++, you can count words in the top 5 web pages or internet IPs, count words in the file size up to a 100MB, count words in the file of the drive, calculate the ratio of the specified number of words to the specified size, and show the word count in the specified file. The most-used Password cracking tools have certain disadvantages. Most of them (except for Cain and Abel) can work only one time on one CPU core or one thread at a time. They don't support the parallel operations feature of current CPUs. They are useless for large password lists. And they can't output passwords. Ainvo Cracker is the newest version of the long-standing and well-respected password cracker Ainvo. It has all the advantages of the previous version, the most popular cracking tool for a long time. It has advanced algorithms and a unique 09e8f5149f
