The subject matter disclosed herein relates to a vacuum bellows system and, in particular, to the components therein. A vacuum bellows is a device for providing a controlled and continuous flow of gas in one direction only. The gas will be evacuated through a conduit at the other end of the bellows, and will be evacuated through a conduit at the other end of the bellows, or some other location. Vacuum bellows often include a bellows having one or more axial slits that define a fluid path. When the bellows is evacuated, the slit or slits reduces the overall diameter of the bellows, thereby increasing the length of the fluid path of the fluid. In some applications, it may be desirable to use a vacuum bellows as a passive 3da54e8ca3
