Less than a month has passed since Barnegat Bay Medical Center in Toms River, New Jersey, was rocked by an incident that led to a brawl and major damage to the emergency department (ED) area. And today, more than six weeks later, a visit to the physical therapy (PT) area of the hospital shows major issues continuing to exist. A source told Reality Changers that the courtesy of the other side — of management — can hardly be overstated. As a run-of-the-mill department such as PT, we, the undersigned, feel even more strongly that patients should have a choice between the best care that is meant for them. Combined with having to forgo access to an established family-practice network where we have enjoyed good care for years, our department is peeved. Every day that this goes on should be a national embarrassment. In our profession, patients are not ever ill-treated. They are certainly not denied personal attention and proper care. The appearance of denial shown by management (another inference from an employee from our school of nursing is that they want us to die — we were asked to pose for a picture, and I promised that when the time came, I would let them know), is extremely distressing for any one of us.

Our department is a safe and positive environment, and, from what is currently known, it is evident the $350,000-per-year director of PT wanted nothing to do with this. A written yes or no is as good as no, and we got both. Sure, their reasons were a bit specious, made up of some bizarre medical babble that we do not understand, knowing as any personal patient from our alumni office would, that there are challenges for anyone. So the fact remains, admitted and denied, that professionals look bad when they behave badly. Even training dollars, as required in our educational prerequisites in the National Council for State Personnel Board's guidelines, cannot be used as payback when something as important as the overall well-being of patients is involved. Again,

However you could just start the gamemode and not have to use the clipboard like I did. Travis decided to go out in caves and see what else he could find by himself. Then came both Calibron and Twilight out of the dark singing. And the story began to evolve for Travis. Travis is picking up several rocks and putting them into the backpack (while killing muttering in between). Suddenly, Calibron ran off screaming "My--MY CAVES--MY GOD CAVES!!! TRAP, TRAP!!! LITTLE--BIG TRAP!" Travis is now ambushed. But he's light on his feet and throws his Multi-shot Devil Clip at the bear (His Bullseye Devil Clip becoming active again). She is caught off guard and tries to attack Travis. But she is slowed up by fear and was unprepared for the shot. Travis throws his 'Prismar' Devil Clip at the bear and they and he go into a knife fight. The claws of the bear make the cut on the left cheek open from Travis' point of view. Though they both end up falling over the cliff, with Travis landing first. He looks up to
